CARRIED IN A GOLDEN HEARSE. The Body of a Japanese Buddhist Fel-

lowed by 150,000 Mouruers. Orano Kosho, head of the Otani sect of Japanese Buidhists, died recently, and his funeral was the occasion for a wonderful outpouring of mourners. The late leader was in his seventy. sixth year and had since the age of cleven been a prominent member in his sect. In the course of his life he had rendered valuable services to the imperial court, and these were recognized in 1873 by the emperor, who conferred upon the prelate a patent of nobility and a pension. The funeral of Orano Kosho was one of the memorable events of Kyoto. Elaborate prepuraceremony, no expense being spared, posed the funeral cortege, which was reviewed by one hundred and fifty thousand more. The members of the imperial family were present, with n vast number of high officials. The funeral services began at 6:30 in the great temple of Kyoto, and the procession to the crematory was formed an hour and a bulf later, the entire route being lined by swarms of people desirous of paying the last tribute of respect to one who was universally loved. The hearse was made of wicker work covered with gold and the journey of two miles occupied over two hours. The high priest came immedintely behind the hearse, shaded from the sun's rays by an enormous erimson umbrella borne by attendants. He was followed by two thousand one hundred priests and three hundred acclytes, the lay monruers of the cortege Mrs. Lease again went to work on the Pullman strike, and it looked as if the trouble was over, when a man in the audience asked the question:

"Is it true, Mrs. Lease, that you have gone over to the probabilion party."

Members of the Family Can Ride Him

But He Hatse Strangers. There is a man who lives near Anthosy, Kan., who makes considerable money out of a well-trained pony. one knows the history of the animal, which is a half Indian and half Texan, and which can run a mile against an average thoroughbred, Its master and any member of the family can ride it anywhere with ease and it appears to be the best behaved pony the world has ever seen. But it objects strongly to being ridden by strangers, and when times are hard its owner will get into a crowd and offer bets indiscriminately that no one can ridg the pany a dozen blocks. Those who know the pony are much too diserect to take any chances, but if there are strangers present there are always takers, and when the stuke is put up it is to all intents and purposes the property of the pony owner. The very best of riders fail ignominiously when they try to exhibit their skill on this peculiar little creature. It does not waste any time on ordinary bucking, but proceeds demurely for a few paces at a rocking chairgait. Then it swings suddenly around, either to the right or left, with every limb stiffened out, with the rider generally going off at a tangent to his utter astonishment. When this trick fails the pony has another one which is still more bewildering in character, and if here fail it has a way of slipping flows on its hannches at an inopportune moment, which disconverts even an expert cowboy.
